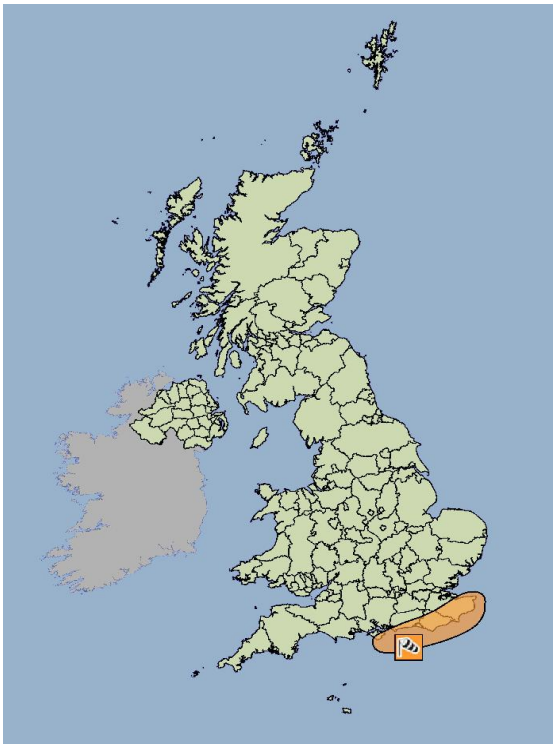
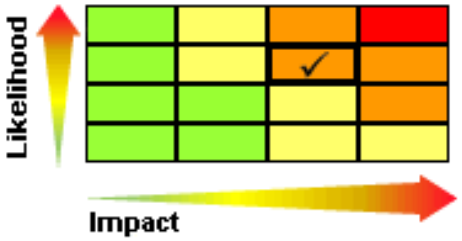
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
"Angus" will move northeast across southern and southeast England during Sunday morning. Southerly then southwesterly gales are likely with storm force winds developing over the English Channel and affecting some coastal districts. Very squally showers are also expected such that isolated gusts of 70-75 mph are also possible further inland in the Amber warning area.

The Met Office have issued an Amber Warning of Wind

Valid from 02:00 on Sun, 20th Nov 2016 until 11:00 on Sun, 20th Nov 2016

Storm Angus is expected to bring some very strong winds to coastal counties of southeast England for a time on Sunday morning, when gusts of 70-80 mph are possible.

Be prepared for disruption to travel services, interruptions to power supplies and some damage to buildings.
